The Crusades contributed to the growing ferment. These military campaigns, extended over a period of something like 200 yrs - (roughly 1090-1290). The Crusades brought many men of the West in contact with the more advanced civilization of the East - with its literature, its philosophy, its science, its architecture, its arts, its industries. The returning

Crusaders brought back with them from the East a host of new impressions and also of new wants.

A crash in the population of medieval Eurasia, already evident in China by 1290 was made worse by disease conveyed in the trading caravans and supply columns of the Mongol empire. Not for the 1st time, but now on an unprecedented scale, bubonic plague transferred itself from marmots, to rats infesting the Caravans, ships, and forms of the wider world.
